Purpose of Seminar

The seminar focuses on the relationship between institutionalisation, justice and the rights of people with disabilities. People with disabilities are living in institutions across the EU – some in large residential settings, others in small group homes. In many cases, people are given little or no option on where to live, and in other cases they are detained against their will. Either way people have very little control over what they can do and when, who they live with, or how they live their lives. Over the past two and a half years, the COVID-19 pandemic has shone a harsh light on the risks experienced by people living in institutions, from increased levels of infection, to higher incidence of violence, harm, human rights abuses and torture. Yet, de-institutionalisation in the EU is progressing slowly, and EU funding continues to support institutions.

The seminar brings together people with disabilities who have been living in institutions with policy makers and advocates in order to identify priorities for progressing de-institutionalisation and providing justice to people who have experienced human rights abuses in institutions within the European Union. There will be short presentations, followed by a longer discussion. The aim is to set a clear and prioritised agenda for steps that a coalition could take. The discussion will be moderated by Steven Allen (Co-executive Director of Validity Foundation).
